

Underwater: Chapter Four (4) ~ My Mother Was a Schizophrenic ~ Matthew 14:24-14:31

Underwater is Chester Browns first series after Yummy Fur, & is an experimental work that attempts to portray life from the point of view of an infant, starting with entirely incomprehensible events and dialogue and gradually developing a coherent narrative as the child matures. Brown discusses his mother more academically in his strip My Mother Was A Schizophrenic. In it, he puts forward the anti-psychiatric idea that what we call schizophrenia isnt a real disease at all, but instead a tool our society uses to deal with people who display socially unacceptable beliefs and behaviour. Inspired by the evangelical tracts of Jack T. Chick, Brown left Xeroxes of these strips at bus stops and stations around Montreal so its message would reach a wider audience. This strip was eventually reproduced in a journal of psychiatry; it first appeared as a backup feature in Underwater. Browns longest-running work is a series of adaptations of the Christian gospels: he finished the Gospel of Mark as a backup feature in Yummy Fur, and the still unfinished Gospel of Matthew appeared in Yummy Fur and Underwater. These adaptations adhere closely to Biblical events but use colloquial language and often grotesque caricature; Browns portrayal of Jesus not only is idiosyncratic and often harsh, but varies considerably between the two books, reflecting the differences in emphasis between gospels.
