In 1936, escalating violence and unrest in Spain explode into civil war. In Barcelona, Sandro, an engineering student and an artist, is suddenly found guilty by association. Hunted by the police, he seeks refuge with Jorge, a wounded zealot, and Teresa, a revolutionary spy, until he is forced to flee the city alone, posing as a priest along the Saint James Way, the sacred pilgrimage route across northern Spain. With his trusty bicycle, Libertad (Sancho Panza to his Don Quixote), Sandro makes his way to his seaside village of Arcasella, avoiding roadblocks and arrest with the help of a picaresque cast of characters including a leftist partisan from Canada who hides Sandro for a week in the branches of a towering beech tree. Once home, Sandro retreats into a secret cave for several years where he begins to set in motion an elaborate and outrageous deception.
