

What a Woman Must Do

Set in the Midwest in 1952, Faith Sullivan's novel follows the interconnected lives of three women of three generations: Bess, 17, Harriet, 39, and Kate, 59. All have been affected by the death of Bess's parents in a car accident. As Bess prepares for college, and Harriet for marriage, Great Aunt Kate holds the trio together. In writing knowingly and appreciatively of small-town life, Sullivan, winner of the Milkweed Editions National Fiction Prize, addresses the universal themes of family, love, and loyalty. What a Woman Must Do draws the reader in. Washington Post Book World
